

What the Data Shows

The average American work week shrunk from 53 hours in 1900 to 42 hours in 1999. Both mothers and fathers reported that they spent more time with their children in 1999 than mothers and fathers reported in 1924 or 1977.

